Book Picks

Read-aloud favorites

- Frankly, Frannie (Al Stern)
  - Frannie is still in elementary school, but she's ready for a real job. During a field trip to the local radio station, she might get her chance. The radio host is missing—in the middle of his show! She's determined to fill in, with hilarious results. Book one in the Frankly Frannie series.

- The Great Gran Plan (Ellie Woolard)
  - What do you get when you cross the Three Little Pigs with Little Red Riding Hood? A picture book adventure where the big bad wolf is plotting to eat Granny, and a pig is on a mission to rescue her! (Also available in Spanish.)

- Bring Me Some Apples and I'll Make You a Pie: A Story About Edna Lewis (Robbin Gourley)
  - Edna was raised on a Virginia farm where she learned to cook with foods her family grew, including apples. This true story tells how she grew up to become an award-winning chef who was known for using farm-fresh ingredients.

- The Truth About Bears: Seriously Funny Facts About Your Favorite Animals (Maxwell Eaton III)
  - A trio of bear narrators—polar, brown, and black—add humor to this nonfiction book. Your child will discover where bears live, how big they are, and what their tracks look like. Includes cartoon illustrations and easy-to-read text, maps, and diagrams.

Writing about me

“Personal narrative” is just a fancy term for a true story about the person your child knows best—herself! She's learning to write that kind of story in school, and you can help her at home with these activities.

Outstanding openings

A strong opening makes readers want to keep reading. Ask your youngster to name something your family did recently (say, visited a museum). Then, each of you can write two opening sentences for a story about it. Write one that doesn't give much information (“We went to a museum”) and one that's more inviting (“My favorite museum has a giant elephant statue”). Trade papers, and tell which sentence you each like better and why.

Details

Vivid details paint pictures for readers. You and your child could each secretly think of a topic and write three sentences that give details about it. If your youngster picks music class, details might include “The piano has smooth black and white keys,” “We shake shiny bells while we sing,” and “Sometimes we dance to music.” Read your sentences aloud, and try to guess each other's topic.

Excellent endings

It's common for new writers to wrap up a story with “Then we went home” or “Then we went to bed.” Work together to write a more creative final sentence for a story about your day. (“The March wind howled outside, and we fell asleep hoping to dream about spring.”)

March 2 is Read Across America Day

Celebrate with your youngster by using books to learn about different places and languages in our country. Here's how:

- Look for a library book set in a different part of the country. Depending on where you live, your child could read about a youngster growing up in a seaside town, a mountain village, or a big city. As you read together, encourage him to compare his life to the characters—how are they similar and different?

- Many languages are spoken in America! Ask a librarian to help you find a book with words in two languages, including the one your family speaks at home. You and your child could learn a few words in the other language and use them in conversations.
Use your knowledge bank

Your youngster's brain holds a key to better reading comprehension—his "bank" of knowledge. Try these strategies that will help him use what he already knows to understand new information.

Before. Unlock your child's knowledge by doing a book preview together. Look at the pictures, and ask him what they make him think of. He might say a photo of a bulldozer reminds him of a construction

Site in your neighborhood. Then you could ask what other construction vehicles he thinks the book might mention.

During. Keep your youngster on the lookout for familiar and unfamiliar information while you read to him. He could write "I knew that!" to stick on a page that mentions a bulldozer scooping dirt and "Cool new fact!" to put on a page that explains what a forklift does.

After. Go back to the pages your child marked, and let him tell you what he learned. Did he find a new fact about something that was familiar? He might say he discovered that some bulldozers have wheels instead of tracks.

Parent to Parent Write a nonfiction book

My son Samuel loves nonfiction books. He especially seems to enjoy the diagrams and other graphics. One day, after we'd read a book about sea animals, I noticed him drawing and labeling a diagram of our house. I asked what he was doing, and he explained that he was writing his own nonfiction book about our pets.

Samuel's diagram showed our cat lounging in a sunny window and our cockatiel on her perch. Next, he wrote a page comparing cats and birds. It was adorable—he wrote that you can snuggle with a cat, but a bird can ride on your shoulder.

He stapled the pages together and drew a book cover. Next, Samuel is going to write a nonfiction book about soccer.

Q&A Reading to siblings

Q My daughters, ages 4 and 6, have very different interests. Do you have any tips for picking books to read aloud that they'll both enjoy?

A Here's an idea: Ask each child to choose a library book she thinks the other would like. Your little one might pick a story about origami for her big sister, and your older daughter may choose a story about rock collecting for your younger one. They'll learn kindness, and they'll be more inclined to listen to stories they picked out.

Then, when you choose books, keep in mind that your older child may enjoy a story that's too young for her if it's on a favorite topic. And your little one will find it easier to pay attention to a harder book that matches her interests. Finally, broaden their interests by selecting books on topics unfamiliar to both children.

Fun with Words What doesn't belong?

Which word doesn't sound like the others—button, bean, noodle, or bow? If your youngster said noodle, she's paying attention to beginning sounds (noodle is the only word that doesn't begin with the b sound). Play this game to help her practice hearing sounds in words.

Let your child fill a box with three objects having the same beginning sound (rattle, raisins, remote) and one that starts with a different sound (bottle).

Then, you pick the item that doesn't belong in the box (bottle). Or you might deliberately make a mistake (rattle) Can your youngster correct you? Now you refill the box, and have her figure out which of your objects doesn't belong.

Variations: Choose items that share an ending sound (like -en as in mitten) or vowel sound (perhaps short a as in cap).
Keep reading aloud

When your youngster listens to you read, good things happen. He uses his imagination, adds words to his vocabulary, and boosts his comprehension.

Plus, even though he probably reads on his own now, reading aloud can help your child develop a love of books that will last a lifetime. Try these ideas.

Choose books together

Novels, short stories, and non-fiction books all make good read-alouds. Spark your youngster's interest in listening by having him help you decide what to read. Look at lists of award-winning books at your library or online. Or ask his teacher, a librarian, or a bookseller for recommendations.

Find time daily

Try to read to your child a little every day. When you're reading a long book, a few pages a day can help him remember what's happening. Tip: If he has reading to do for class, you might suggest that he finish it first and then play outside or have a snack before he settles down to enjoy a read-aloud.

Include the family

Invite everyone to listen when you read to your youngster. Create a relaxed atmosphere by stopping to laugh at funny parts or asking for opinions about a character's decision. At the end of story time, build excitement for the next installment by letting each family member predict what will happen.

Be a fact finder

Use trivia as a fun way to get the whole family learning together. Gather almanacs, record books, or trivia books from the library, and do these activities:

- Let your youngster pose a fact-based challenge. (“Find a fact about outer space.”) Everyone searches the books, and the first person to find a fact that fits reads it aloud. (“All planets rotate counterclockwise except Venus and Uranus.”) Then, that family member asks for the next fact.
- Play a board game with a twist: To move, answer a question from another player based on a fact from a book. Example: “What was Thomas Edison's middle name?” (Alva) The first player to circle the board wins.
Organize before writing

Help your youngster set herself up for writing success! She can turn in better reports and essays by organizing ideas and information before she starts writing. Encourage her to use this three-step method.

1. Get focused. The first step is pinpointing the main idea of her paper. If your child’s teacher assigns a report on the Underground Railroad, her main idea could be “The Underground Railroad was a secret network that helped some enslaved people escape to freedom.”

2. Choose subtopics. As your youngster does research, suggest that she write each fact on a separate index card. Then, she can sort the cards into subtopics (“Leaders,” “Routes,” “Opposition”). She might label an envelope for each category and store the cards in the appropriate one.

3. Review notes. Before she writes her paper, she should read over the note cards in each category. She can set aside any that don’t support her main idea and rearrange those that belong with a different subtopic. Now, she’s ready to write.

Fun with Words

Write a “list poem”

Your child can learn to describe a topic thoroughly by writing a list poem. It’s just what it sounds like: a list of words and phrases that go together to make a poem.

First, have your youngster pick a person, place, or thing and write a title for his poem (“My Best Friend,” “The Roller Skating Rink,” “A Rainy Day”).

Next, he can list words and phrases underneath. Encourage him to pick a variety of vivid vocabulary words, such as action words or words that describe colors and senses. Finally, he might wrap up his poem by repeating the title as the last line. Here’s an example:

A Rainy Day
Drips, drops, sprinkles
Gray sky
Dark clouds
Lightning flashes
Thunder booms
Clouds burst open
A rainy day.

Q&A

Ready for testing

Q My son has standardized tests coming up. How can I help him prepare for the reading sections?

A Start by asking him what kinds of questions will be on the test. He can find out from his teacher or look at sample exams given out in class or posted online. Then, he can use homework assignments as practice.

If the exam will be timed, your child could time himself when he writes an English essay. Or he might use strategies for reading-comprehension questions when he has history assignments.

For instance, suggest that he start by reading the questions in a handout or a textbook chapter—and then read the relevant passages. This will tell him what information to look for, and he’ll be ready to try this technique on test day.

Note: Make sure your child gets a good night’s sleep and a healthy breakfast before his test (and every day).
