Playing with ABCs

Recognizing the letters of the alphabet is one of the first stepping-stones on the exciting path to becoming an independent reader. Try these activities as your child learns her ABCs.

Alphabet train

All aboard! This playtime project encourages your youngster to write and play with letters. Let her collect small cardboard boxes. She can cover each one with construction paper and label it with a different letter of the alphabet (uppercase and lowercase). Then, punch holes in the boxes, and use yarn to string them together like cars in a train.

Alpha-doodles

Calling your child's attention to loops, lines, and curves helps her tell similar letters apart. Pick two lowercase letters, perhaps p and q or r and s. Have her print a big version of each letter and turn them into doodles. She might draw a smiley face in the loop of the p and make the straight line into a ponytail by drawing a ribbon around it.

Letter search

Choose a word, and see if your youngster can find its letters on signs or labels. She'll learn to recognize letters with different fonts, which will help her read the print in various books. Before dinner, you could say, "We're having tacos. Go find t-a-c-o-s." Maybe she'll spot t on the package of tortillas, a on a jar of salsa, and so on.

I found a poem!

A pile of books next to your youngster's bed or at the library could inspire him to write a "found poem."

A found poem uses words your child finds in print—in this case, on book spines. Have him choose several books with fun titles and stack them so he can see all the spines. For example, his stack might include Chicka Chicka Boom Boom (Bill Martin Jr. and John Archambault) and Zin! Zin! Zin! A Violin! (Lloyd Moss).

Now he can use the words to write a poem. It's fine for him to add words of his own, too. His poem might begin: "Chicka chicka zin zin / I like to play the violin."
Make words stick

To truly learn new words, your youngster needs to use them over and over again in different situations. Use these strategies to make new words a permanent part of his vocabulary.

See. Attaching words to something concrete helps to cement them in your child’s memory. When you’re out and about, you might point out construction workers using a crane to lift a load, or say the wind is blustery because it’s blowing hard.

Fun with Words

Compound combos

Thanks + giving = Thanksgiving!

Here’s an idea that lets your child learn about compound words, or longer words made up of two smaller words.

Make cards

Together, think of a dozen compound words (mailbox, playground). Have her write and illustrate the two words from each compound word on separate index cards. (For suitcase, she would write suit on one card and case on another.)

Mix and match

Ask your youngster to form other compound words. She might think, “A housefly is a fly in the house. I could make fieryfly by using fire from campfire and fly from housefly.” Or maybe she’ll form sunflower by putting together sun from sunrise and flower from flowerpot. How many combinations can she find?

Tell me about your drawing

While volunteering in my son’s classroom, I noticed the teacher asking students to tell stories about pictures they drew. What’s the purpose of this?

Drawing a picture is one way your son tells a story. For instance, if he draws a squirrel with its cheeks full of nuts, he’s communicating that the squirrel is collecting nuts. Describing the picture out loud encourages him to think it through and perhaps add more information.

After he finishes telling you about a picture, take the conversation a step further by asking questions. For example, you might say, “Where will the squirrel hide the nuts?” Or maybe you’ll ask about the process that went into his drawing: “How did you choose the colors?”

Tips: Suggest that he write a story about his drawing—or offer to write down his story as he dictates it to you.
Meet Red, a thoughtful and wise giant oak tree—and the narrator of this story. Red has a lot of rings (which means she's very old) and knows all the people and animals in her neighborhood. When a new family moves in, she helps two children become friends, despite their differences.

Indy Cars (Carrie A. Braulich)
Readers, start your engines, and learn all about Indy race cars! This nonfiction book offers an in-depth look at Indy car races, how the cars are built, what pit crews do, and more. Includes colorful photographs and a glossary. (Also available in Spanish.)

Two Dogs in a Trench Coat Go to School (Julie Falatho)
Stewart’s dogs Sassy and Waldo spend all day protecting their house. One day, they decide to sneak into Stewart’s school to “protect” him. When they dress in disguise, the students think they have a new classmate. This funny story is the first in the Two Dogs series.

...If You Sailed on the Mayflower in 1620 (Ann McGovern)
What did the pilgrims eat on the Mayflower? What did they do for fun? Each chapter in this nonfiction book answers a question about the pilgrims, from the reasons for their voyage to what daily life was like after they reached their destination.

Dig into reading

The fun isn’t over when a story ends—it’s just beginning! These creative follow-up activities build key reading comprehension skills your youngster needs, including visualizing, predicting, and summarizing.

Map the setting
Encourage your child to take an imaginary journey through a story’s setting by sketching each place mentioned. His map will let him visualize the characters’ surroundings and better understand their actions. For instance, he might draw the route a character takes across the country or illustrate the forest where the animals live.

Write a prequel or sequel
What happened before the story started? What happens after it ends? Have your youngster explore the possibilities by adding a chapter to the beginning or end. He might write about how the characters met, or the next challenge they face. Suggest that he refer to the original tale to help him imagine past events or predict future ones.

Build a story pyramid
Help your child learn to focus on a story’s most important details and zero in on the main idea. He can practice summarizing by drawing a pyramid and filling it with these five lines:

Line 1: The main character’s name
Line 2: Two words describing that character
Line 3: Three words describing the setting
Line 4: Four words explaining the problem
Line 5: Five words telling the conclusion

Foolproof proofreading

Spell-check is a useful tool, but it’s not a substitute for your child’s careful eyes. Share these tips for spotting missing or misused words when she types a paper:

- Take a break between writing and proofreading. A fresh look will let your youngster see mistakes more easily.
- Print it out. Checking it in two formats (paper and screen) might help her find errors she’d otherwise miss.
- List problem words (your/you're, its/it’s). Have her scan her paper for them and double-check their use.
- Read it out loud. To concentrate on each word, your child can hold a piece of paper under each line.
Boost conversation skills

Can something as simple as talking with your child help her in school? You bet! Good conversation skills let her take part in group discussions and listen to other people’s ideas. Use these strategies.

Choose a topic. Take turns thinking of subjects that appeal to everyone so nobody feels left out of the conversation. Some possibilities: favorite books, hobbies, sports teams, family history.

Humorous homophones

Boost your youngster’s vocabulary with this silly homophone activity. Start by talking to him about what homophones are, and end by writing sentences that pair the words in ways that make everyone laugh out loud.

Homophones are words that sound alike but have different spellings and meanings, such as night/knight, see/sea, here/there. Work together to list as many homophones as possible. You might look for them in books or online.

Now, take turns writing silly sentences using several pairs of homophones. Examples: “Have I told you the tale of my dear dog who chases his tail every time he sees a deer?” “Do you see the aisle in the sea? It’s between that isle and the other isle!” Read your sentences aloud, and vote for the funniest one!

A writer’s notebook

Spark your child’s creativity by having him collect story ideas in his own “Author’s Notebook.” Here are some entries he might start with.

All about me

Imagine someone is making a movie of your life. Who would star in it? What would the first scene be?

The perfect meal

Write a menu for your ideal meal. List your special dinner guests, and create an invitation.

Sweet dreams

Record notes about vivid or interesting dreams you have. Use your imagination to write an adventure story or a mystery about them.

My favorite things

List treasured possessions (baseball medal, family quilt) or favorite places (local waterfall, Grandma’s house). Build stories about what they mean to you.

Your youngster can add ideas as he thinks of them. When he’s ready to write, he’ll have lots of choices to pick from!
